

QUESTION #8 RESPONSES

When I went there was some natural disaster happening and our class was shortened to only about an hour. They signed us off anyway, so I don't remember anything from that class.

Not much. It was very generic and not OR focused in the least.

Don't remember, it was a long time ago

the advanced preceptor course was MUCH better than the basic preceptor class

too long ago to remember the exact basics of the class

N/a

I honestly don't remember what was all involved with the course.

I took it several years ago, > 5yrs, have not precepted much. I would appreciate a refresher.

I vaguely remember them discussing the learning styles of adults... It was a long time ago.

How to approach difficult situations or conflict while precepting

I don't remember there being anything very helpful

I don't really remember the content of this class.

it provides a basic outline for precepting, but as most things in the hospitals revolving around nurses is, it is also targeted for floor nursing, and does not have a lot of OR applicability

It has been a while - don't really remember the course but do remember thinking it didn't really apply to the OR.

Nothing. They go over things on the floor and ICU. We need to have our own course for the OR long time ago. Not impressive.

The most helpful part of the course was finding out different learning types The least helpful part of this course was that it was directed towards floor nursing and doesnt speak to the speciality of the Operating Room not much, as I was precepting for almost a year before taking the class.

Forgot what was taught...

Most helpful: Knowledge of adult learning styles Least helpful: Scenarios geared toward med/surg and ICU preceptors -- none pertinent to OR

I felt that it was geared stictly to nursing and floor nursing.
